Fr Joe writes

I am grateful to all in the parish who help to sustain the community throughout the year. This enables me to take a break now and again. During my holidays the parish was also enriched by a number of priests. The weekend Masses were presided over by Fr Slavin, the weekday Masses and funerals by Fr Sebastian, Fr Seenan, Fr Dowling, Fr Lawlor. Prayer services were also arranged when there was no Mass on 3 Saturdays. I am grateful to all.

During the time I was away I was celebrating Mass in Gortahork, Co Donegal, with the kind permission of Fr Séan, and accompanied by members of the faithful. Fr Pat Hennessy also celebrated on the days he was there.

One of the highlights of the holiday was the day we spent gathering dulse, which is an edible seafood rich in iron which can be eaten raw or boiled like cabbage. It can only be gathered at very low tide and it meant clambering over boulders and rocks until we reached the place where it was growing on the rock, mostly under some water but nourished by the sun. Twisting and turning on the boulders on the way back put severe strain on my back and, for a week or so, curtailed my activities, but it was worth is all. We didn't gather much that day but my sore back aroused some sympathy and one or two others collected much more than we did and gave me a good bag full to take back to those who asked me for some as well as for my own use. It can be bought in the shops but there is nothing to beat the dulse collected and dried out in the sun giving a crisp and salty taste.

Great kindness was shown us during the time we spent over and when Fr Pat arrived this was even more evident since so many from Rutherglen have connections in that part of God's beautiful world.
